ZECH. XIV .- 7. At evening time there shall be light, When the heart is full of grief,

Though the spirit borne with pressing care, Looks vainly for relief. The hour of darkness o'er the soul, Presages coming dawn,

When it comes at the hour of man's last breath,

Or in the health of youth's gay morn. Then murmur not, affliction's child, Though the hour of darkness roll,

With power of gloom that can be felt, O'er the portals of thy soul. 'Tis that thou may'st more clearly see,

The hand of a father kind, Leading thee through the valley dark,

The glorious light to find. 'Tis better in the days of youth To find the "night of weeping,"

That the "morn of joy" may light thy way, Through a long life's vigils keeping. O. [From the "Flag of the Union."] THE TELEGRAPH FLAG.
